Dear IMF Supporters,

It has been a full year since our last issue of Making Miracles. Last summer, we made the deliberate decision to scale back the frequency of its publication in an effort to conserve resources. But we remain dedicated to Making Miracles and its important purpose of sharing your stories and singing your praises. The result is this jam-packed issue, a retrospective of all the wonderful things our members participated in over the last year.

The year has been a tumultuous one — to say the least — in so many ways. Yet the IMF has remained constant in our commitment to provide education and support to myeloma patients and their families. We have also maintained our impassioned commitment to fund the highest level of collaborative research. Your support of our programs and dedication to our mission has enabled the IMF to be an oasis for so many during this difficult time.

This past year also saw the IMF’s expansion of our advocacy program. Our grassroots efforts depend greatly on the participation of our membership. This is another example of how our members are actively engaged in making their own miracles.

We are profoundly touched by the outpouring we have seen over the past year and the level of commitment we already have for this year. And it is never too late to get involved! Participation in the IMF’s member events or advocacy programs not only helps us — it also provides you with a personally fulfilling way to be part of the search for a cure.

On behalf of everyone at the IMF, thank you to the army of volunteers who get involved and get the word out. We couldn’t do it without you and we look forward to continuing our partnership with you this year and beyond.

With my deepest appreciation for every miracle,

Heather Cooper Ortner
Vice President of Development
They originally came together for support. They ended up creating promise for the future.

In April 2008, Maddie Hunter, Ann McNeill, and Paula Van Riper convened at the IMF’s Annual Support Group Leaders Retreat. They shared geography. Maddie co-leads the Philadelphia Myeloma Networking Group; Ann leads the Hackensack, New Jersey group; Paula, the Central New Jersey group.

The three women admired each other’s leadership and engagement in the myeloma community. All three also sensed it was time to extend the commitment of their support groups beyond the walls of their monthly meetings. They would do so by joining together.

One year later, on April 25, 2009, it is — miraculously — an 80 degree day in Philadelphia. The sun is shining. Five hundred runners and walkers wait at the starting line for the Miles for Myeloma 5K to begin.

By the end of the day, over $92,000 has been raised — with more than $67,000 going to the IMF. How did they do it?

Overseeing the planning was Karen Horan. Though Karen had ample professional fundraising experience, she quickly understood that this project was special. Her husband was diagnosed with myeloma four years ago, at age 37. “Having your own connection to the disease, and having people whose struggles you’re personally aware of help you coordinate the event — it’s a different perspective,” Karen says.

Karen is quick to acknowledge the many hard-working, passionate people who helped build the event. They just as quickly credit her for keeping things successfully in motion. “With her outstanding leadership and creative ideas, Karen was our touchstone,” Paula says.

Karen and her fellow planners also understood that the race itself was only one part of the equation. They also gave great thought and preparation to the pre- and post-race atmosphere.

They built a grandstand, complete with a podium, for a pre-race ceremony. Local NBC News anchor Terry Ruggles served as Master of Ceremonies, introducing esteemed speakers, including Philadelphia Mayor Michael Nutter.

Post-race, the event segued into a family-friendly festival, including a D.J., a clown, and the announced results of the event’s opportunity drawing — organized by Marilyn Alexander, Sharon Klein, and Earl Kostrow and accounting for $17,000 of the day’s earnings. Prizes included a 42-inch flat-screen television, a 7-day

Let’s Misbehave

While raising money to combat myeloma, Alexandra Zousmer and Joanna Share also shared a second purpose: they wanted to show their peers (in their mid-20s) that fundraising could be something through which “we can be our fun, crazy selves while still doing good for society,” Alex says. From those two goals, Misbehave for Multiple Myeloma was born.

On September 25, 2009, 160 guests joined Alex and Joanna at Captain Morgan’s Club in Chicago. In addition to their many friends in the city, family and friends flew in from both coasts to join the misbehavior, including Arnold Zousmer – Alex’s father and Joanna’s uncle – an 11-year myeloma survivor. “He is an inspiration to us all,” Joanna says.

For a $30 admission charge, the revelers enjoyed music, an open bar, games, an auction and a raffle supported by local sponsors. The two women originally hoped to raise $7,500. They ended up raising $14,000.

“I cannot even tell you how many phone calls, emails, and Facebook posts I got the days following the event to say how much fun people had, and what a great evening it was,” Joanna reports. “And it all ran smoothly thanks to the help of all our amazing volunteers,” Alex adds.

Other family members have joined in the fundraising as well, including Alex’s brother Maxwell, planning their own events to support the cause. And Alex and Joanna are already planning their second annual excuse to misbehave for November 6, 2010. “Without the support of the IMF, my dad would not be where he is today,” Alex says.

We hope you’ll find reading about these wonderful events inspirational and decide to get involved yourself. Contact Suzanne Battaglia today!

My Story: His Marathon for His Mom

By Gail Pollard

When I count my blessings, my son, Steve Hoppe, is always high up on my list. I think the world of him, but I never would have thought that Steve would take it upon himself to run the 113th Annual Boston Marathon last spring – let alone dedicate his endeavor to the International Myeloma Foundation and to me.

I was diagnosed with myeloma two years ago, from my annual blood tests. I had never heard of myeloma before. Steve hadn’t either. Sometimes it’s hard to think about the seriousness of this disease, but through a strong faith, my family and I have been able to accept it and work through it.

Steve applied that faith and hard work to his marathon training. On many occasions he called to let me know how far and fast he had run that day. These progress reports alone made me proud because, mind you, he was training for this marathon while serving as a minister at three different churches in Manhattan and while becoming the proud new parent of Zac, a Sheeba Enu puppy. Between sermons, speaking engagements, workshops, church duties, and walking his new puppy, he found time not only to train, but to make his marathon run a fundraiser, and to encourage everyone he knew to donate to the IMF.

Steve’s literal road to the marathon began with a six-hour bus ride from New York City to Boston. I wish I could have made it to Boston with him, but I had just received my second stem cell transplant and I was too weak to travel. Back in my three (very active!) children’s school days, I always tried to attend each one of their sporting events. I cheered for them at the top of my lungs. Not making it to Boston for Steve’s marathon, I felt like I was that young mother again, only this time I was missing one of those very big school events that I never, ever missed.

Scooting from Florida to Washington, D.C.

On August 1, 2009, Jim Barth left his home in Clearwater, Florida for the IMF’s Patient & Family Seminar in Washington, D.C. He drove there on his scooter, raising money for the IMF along the way.

Jim’s Ride-a-thon for Myeloma marked the 3-year anniversary of his own diagnosis. “I have been fortunate to remain stable,” Jim reports. “This has allowed me to defer treatment, maintain relative quality of life, and have the freedom to keep riding.” But, as a co-founder of his area support group, Jim is well aware that not everyone is afforded this freedom. “This ride was for them,” he says, and was also an opportunity to give back to the IMF, which has been “very beneficial to myself and I’ve seen how their offerings have helped others.”

The 2400-mile round trip ride afforded Jim the opportunity to reconnect with relatives and friends along the way. Upwards of 70 people supported Jim’s journey by donating more than $5,000. They also followed his adventures through his blog.

Once he arrived in D.C., “the seminar itself was wonderful – as they always are,” Jim reports. He was also the seminar’s winner of the tickets to the IMF’s 3rd Annual Gala Celebrating Peter Boyle, a highlight of his trip. But the ultimate highlight, Jim says, was arriving home at the end of the 2400 miles, “when I was able to see my wife again.”

Bashing Myeloma

Rob Bradford was diagnosed with myeloma in 2005 and received a transplant seven months later. “I felt very fortunate that I had health insurance and great family and friend support,” he says. “But I noticed that others did not.” From this gratitude and observation, Coach Rob’s Benefit Bash was born.

Four years later, Rob’s event is bigger than ever. It now extends over two days, encompassing dinner and entertainment on the first evening, and a golf tournament the following morning. The October 10-11, 2009 bash included 151 evening revelers enjoying the event’s first casino night, as well as an auction, at the Sheraton Orlando North Hotel in Maitland, Florida. The next day, 140 golfers – the most ever – played the links at Rock Springs Ridge Golf Club in Apopka.

“I’m extremely grateful that my family, friends, co-workers and employers are so generous in supporting this two-day event,” Rob says. And support it they do! Previous bashes raised enough funds to sponsor an IMF Novis Research Grant – and the 2009 event raised $20,000 more. By the time the October 2010 event is complete, Coach Rob’s Benefit Bash will be sponsoring a second Novis Research Grant.

“The IMF helped my family and I understand what I was up against,” Rob says. And now: “I am very interested in finding a cure.”

“All In” For the IMF

Jack Aiello is not only a 15-year myeloma survivor and co-leader of the Greater Bay Area California myeloma support group – he’s also a poker enthusiast. For the past six years he has hosted an annual poker tournament, and for his November 14, 2009 event, donated all of the evening’s buy-ins to the IMF. “It was a great time spent with friends doing a good thing!” Jack says.

Thirty card sharks anted up for Jack’s 6th Annual Texas Hold ‘Em Tournament. Everyone who lost early stayed and “hovered” around the final table. Jack was pleased that the evening resulted in its sixth different winner in the event’s six years.

He was even more pleased that the winner, whose prize included $100, promptly donated that money back to fight myeloma.

In total, Jack’s 6th Annual Texas Hold ‘Em Tournament netted over $3,000 for the cause. “More dollars were raised than ever before because the IMF gave me a fundraising web [page on their] site,” Jack reports.

“I’ve known the IMF for 15 years,” he adds. “They’ve always been there for the patient.”

Rich Saletan Remembered

IMF Board Member Rich Saletan was beloved by all – starting with his children, Steve Saletan and Liz Berkman. Steve and Liz, along with the rest of their family, knew beyond a doubt that creating an IMF fundraiser in his memory was the best way to honor his life.

“My Dad had a few great passions in his life,” says Steve. “His family was always first and foremost, his business while he was still working,
On November 7th, 2009, almost 1,200 guests packed the Wilshire Ebell Theatre in Los Angeles for the IMF’s 3rd Annual Comedy Celebration benefiting the Peter Boyle Memorial Fund. The annual fundraiser once again broke IMF fundraising records by bringing in nearly $700,000 for our award-winning research programs and patient services.

The Annual Comedy Celebration was born when Loraine Boyle, IMF Board member and wife of the late actor Peter Boyle, reached out to Susie Novis and Dr. Brian Durie with a profound desire to help make a difference. Having established the Peter Boyle Memorial Fund, she invited Peter’s colleagues and friends to put on a comedy show in his honor to raise myeloma awareness and funds for the IMF.

This year, Amy and Steve Weiss joined the event as co-chairs. Together with Loraine, they rounded up an exceptional cast of comedians to come out in support of the IMF. Ray Romano hosted the evening for the third year in a row, this time sharing the stage with Jimmy Kimmel, introducing featured appearances by Jason Alexander, Brad Garrett, Doris Roberts, Bob Saget, and Fred Willard, and a special musical performance by Tenacious D featuring Jack Black and Kyle Gass.
Benefiting the Peter Boyle Memorial Fund for Myeloma Research

In addition to the stellar show, the IMF welcomed attendees to enjoy a pre-show cocktail party and silent auction. Items up for bid included guitars signed by Sting and Meat Loaf, boxing gloves from Mohammed Ali and Sugar Ray Leonard, and a fantastic assortment of trips, memorabilia, jewelry, and much more — all graciously donated for the cause, and all making a significant impact on the overall success of the event.

VIP guests were also treated to a post-show champagne and dessert reception lasting well into the night.

The IMF would like to thank our presenting sponsors, Celgene and Millennium, as well as the nearly 30 additional event sponsors for their generous support of an evening that everyone will remember.

Each performer made the audience laugh 'til they cried. The show’s climax was Tenacious D with Jack Black and Kyle Gass performing some of their hysterical songs.

Both Presenting Sponsors turned out in great numbers to support the IMF and the 3rd Annual Comedy Celebration.
golf, and later in life the IMF.” And so when Steve and his family set about to brainstorm the best event to honor Rich, the answer was quite simple. “It was very easy to marry his passion for golf with his passion for the IMF,” Steve says.

The RHS Open Golf Tournament was planned quickly, finalized only two months before the November 2009 event, but the support was profound, resulting in almost $11,000 for the IMF. Generous donations stemmed not only from the golfers who participated that day in Mt. Pleasant, South Carolina, but also from a large outpouring from friends and family all around the country. “I was very honored to have so many friends who could not make the event donate,” Liz says.

Liz and Steve achieved this broad-based support by creating an invitation that not only gave information about the event, but also highlighted Rich’s role in the IMF, and why the IMF had mattered so much to him. “We received a bunch of donations from people that I had never even met, who had known my dad since as far back as high school,” Steve reports. “The highlight for me was reading all of the notes that came in with the donations. It was great to see how many lives he had touched.”

Rich’s influence on people not only reaches back, but also extends forward. “Honoring my dad through this fundraiser is a way for his memory to live on for my children to never forget what a great PopPop he was,” Liz says.

Steve and Liz are already planning their second RHS Open, targeted for Spring 2011. “We are happy to raise much needed funds in hopes of one day finding a cure so nobody else has to lose a loved one to this terrible disease,” Liz says.

“I’m happy to be honoring my dad’s legacy this way,” she adds. “But I also wish, as all probably do, that I had my dad still here fighting the fight.”

Rally Against Myeloma

As Lisa Cash declares it: “I have a love/hate relationship with myeloma. I love a friend who has myeloma, so I hate myeloma.”

It was this “love/hate relationship” that compelled Lisa to create a fundraiser. “It was an outlet for me to channel something positive and helpful for my friend,” Lisa says. “I had no words to heal, no power to alleviate the suffering. But I could not stand by idle, it’s not my nature.”

And so in Paducah, Kentucky on September 19, 2009, Lisa led the Who’s Your Daddy Bike Rally – an event chosen because both Lisa and her friend are motorcycle enthusiasts, and named in honor of the two joints that spanned either end of the ride: Hoddaddy’s and Fat Daddy’s. In between, the 21 riders participated in a poker run, stopping at checkpoints and drawing a playing card at each one. Crowds along the way cheered the riders on. Lisa also set up a lunch stop at a Harley shop, manned by volunteering family and friends.

The rally ended at Fat Daddy’s, where 100 supporters enjoyed a party, including a live band. In total, Who’s Your Daddy raised close to $2,500 through “riding fees,” special logo t-shirt sales, and donations from party-goers who came out for the cause.

Though she was anxious for it all to come together well, the event itself was nothing less than wonderful. “I was thrilled that my friend was able to attend,” Lisa reports, “and humbled by the generosity of humankind.”

Celebrity Jeopardy! for the IMF

The IMF is grateful for all of its donors and members, so to have one such supporter famous enough to appear on Celebrity Jeopardy! – and smart enough to win – is really a bonus.

A very big bonus!

On October 15, 2009, television audiences around the country watched Michael McKean – of This is Spinal Tap, Best in Show, and Laverne & Shirley fame (among many other projects) – face off against NBA legend Kareem Abdul Jabbar and television journalist Soledad O’Brien. Michael emerged victorious, winning the IMF $50,000. His triumph funds a 2010 Novis Research Grant.

Though everyone who knows Michael appreciates his quick intelligence, he in no way felt this victory was pre-determined. As he declared on the Jeopardy! web site, “I was terrified until the very end that someone was just gonna dance around me and leave me in the dust. And a little humiliation is actually good for the soul, so I knew I’d survive. But I’m glad I won!”

This wasn’t Michael’s first Jeopardy! foray for the IMF. He also played in 2006, earning the IMF $25,000. In 2007, Michael also generously donated his time and talents to Concert For A Cause, which raised $45,000 in support of the IMF’s programs and services. Michael does all of this in memory of Lee Grayson, a dear friend since high school; Lee succumbed to myeloma in 2002.

Having now reached Celebrity Jeopardy! semi-finalist status, Michael will continue playing in May 2010 for a chance to win one million dollars for the IMF! Be sure to visit www.myeloma.org for future information – including the air dates – for this thrilling event.

Your Efforts Advance Myeloma Research

For the past 17 years, the IMF’s Research Grants Program has led the way in identifying, supporting, and developing the world’s most promising myeloma research.

Half of the 2010 Brian D. Novis Research Grants were fully funded by IMFers just like you – people making a difference through organizing and participating in member fundraisers.

This issue’s cover story shares how the Philadelphia Multiple Myeloma Networking Group, Central New Jersey Support Group and Northern New Jersey Support Group are jointly funding the work of Dr. Vyacheslav Yurchenko through their Miles for Myeloma 5K. Actor Michael McKean’s Celebrity Jeopardy! prowess (see sidebar to the left) currently funds Dr. Eline Menu’s research; Dr. Steffan Nawricki’s work is supported by Carol Klein and Nancy Moses through their Afternoon Tea (featured in our Spring 2009 issue).

All three of these member fundraisers support Junior Grant awards in the amount of $50,000. Information about each grant winner’s research can be found on our web site, www.myeloma.org, and in the Fall 2009/Winter 2010 issue of Myeloma Today.

There are multiple ways for your member fundraiser to support the IMF Research Grants Program – with plenty of inspiration to draw from these pages. Support can come from one big event, of course. But it could also draw upon donations accrued over several years of your event. Contact Suzanne Battaglia at SBattaglia@myeloma.org or (800) 452-2873 to get your event rolling today!
So what a wonderful surprise when Steve told me that I didn’t have to miss it after all! The wonders of technology! Each marathon runner had a chip in his or her sneaker so their times could be accurately recorded. This chip also allowed me to “track” my son as he ran. As Steve was gearing up to start the race, I opened up my laptop, staring at the marathon course online. Throughout the race, I received “alerts” telling me where Steve was on the course — and how fast he was running. I honestly think my heart was racing as fast as his. And just like when he was young, I found myself screaming at the top of my lungs every time a new alert popped up on my laptop!

That Steve ran this marathon at all, with everything else that his life entails, is unbelievable. His race results were even more unbelievable. Out of a field of 30,000 runners, he placed 421st. Even more importantly, he raised $4,690 for the IMF. What amazing accomplishments!

Being diagnosed with multiple myeloma was bittersweet for me, as it is for so many of us. Even though my treatment has been a difficult journey, through it I have been able to experience the love and generosity of my husband, family, and friends in ways I never would have otherwise known. Steve, his dedication, and everyone’s donations and prayers are at the heart of this. And because of this I can truly say, My cup runneth over.

Six Ways to Remember the INTERNATIONAL MYELOMA FOUNDATION

There are many ways to remember the International Myeloma Foundation (IMF) in your estate plans – you may be surprised how modest choices can accomplish so much, and affect so many lives. Here are six options to consider:

1. Amend an existing insurance policy to add the IMF as an additional beneficiary. Or, you could purchase a new policy for the IMF’s benefit.
2. Visit your personnel office and ask to amend your group life insurance policy or retirement plan to add the IMF as one of your beneficiaries.
3. Instruct your lawyer to prepare a simple, inexpensive codicil to your existing Will, creating a bequest for the IMF.
4. Deed your house to the IMF and continue to live in it. Your income tax savings from the gift may cover any legal costs associated with making this arrangement.
5. Leave written instructions for your surviving spouse to include the IMF when redrawing his or her Will.
6. If you have a sizable estate, let us show you how a Charitable Trust may benefit both you and the IMF. Again, the tax advantages are significant and may offset any legal costs.

Some of the arrangements suggested above are revocable; others cannot be changed once established. Some work better with cash, and others with appreciated assets. There are many variations, and therefore a giving plan can always be tailored to your needs, desires and capabilities.

Although we do not practice estate planning, Heather Cooper Ortner will be happy to sit down with you and answer your questions to help you get the ball rolling. For your protection, she will also urge you to check with a professional advisor to assist in the process. We welcome you to contact Heather at hortner@myeloma.org or (800) 452-2873.
